RELIQUE.
A wild, wet night! The driving sleet
Blurs all the lamps along the quay;
The windows shake; the busy street
Is yet alive with hurrying feet.
The wind raves from the sea!
So let me leave! My lamp burns bright;
My long day's work is almost done;
I cannot rest each sound and sight—
I cannot close the year, to-night,
I choose to be alone.
Alone, with doors and windows fast,
Before my open desk I stand;
Alas! I can't remember long to pass,
My hidden, hidden wealth, since last
I held thee in my hand!
So there I lie! From year to year
I see the ribbons change; the page
Turns yellow; and the very tear
That blots the writing, disappears
And fades away with age.
Not all the riches of the earth,
Not all the treasures of the sea,
Could buy these hours—Gods from my heart;
And yet the secret of their worth
Must live and die with me.

THE MIDNIGHT APARTMENT.
THE OLD SIXTON'S STORY.
O' treacherous night!
Thou lead'st thy ready veil to every treason!
And leading mischief thrives beneath the shade
Of thy black wings, thou art the foe of death!
Mr. Colebrook was dead. He was a rich man, yet a slight acquaintance with him would have convinced even a superficial observer that he was not a happy man. He was misanthropic in his views, though he had the reputation in the street of being a very kind-hearted and benevolent man. Every day seemed to usher him into the arms of a new strife with the powers of misery. Apparently he was tired of life, and impatiently waited for the hour that had now come, and which would place him beyond the trials and woes of this sublunary existence.
And yet many could remember when he was a gay and cheerful person. Before his marriage with the poor but beautiful girl some seven years before his death, he had worn a sunny smile, and his life seemed to him a pleasant dream.
—Though only thirty-five when he married, people said there was too much difference between his own age and that of his wife, who was a little less than twenty. From one extreme she went to the other. She had been poor, and forced to content herself with but few of the luxuries and gayeties of life; but now she was rich, and her indulgent husband gave her free access to his coffers. Wealth fostered pride, and Mrs. Colebrook became a leader of fashion—the gayest of the gay. Her beauty and her influential position in society made her a queen, and her smile was courted by the brilliant and dissolute. The hours when she was at home, was always filled with gay gallants and lordly ladies.
All the world could see this; and the next thing it saw, was that Mr. Colebrook grew sad and melancholy; that his wife was cold to him, and there was little, if any, sympathy between them. Then people said the poor man had married badly, and the croakers all "knew that it would be so."
Mr. Colebrook was dead. Whatever woes had weighed him down, he was beyond their reach now. People said he had died of a broken heart; that the whirl of pleasure in his own home had been a hell to him; and that his gay wife had been a scorpion who stung him to death. For my part, I pay but little attention to the busy tongue of gossip. I account all it says, whether good or bad, as mere slander. Whatever stories I had heard concerning Mrs. Colebrook—and I heard many—passed in at one ear and out at the other.
"Mr. Mortal," said a man at my door.
"That is my name."
"Mr. Colebrook is dead, and Mrs. Colebrook wants you to come up to the house and lay him out."
"Mr. Colebrook?" I exclaimed, for the intelligence was very unexpected to me as well as to the whole city, when it was announced.
"I had heard that he was suffering from an attack of bilious colic; but it had not been even rumored that he was dangerously sick."
"Yes, he is dead," replied the man.
"Mrs. Colebrook wishes you to make haste."
"I didn't know he was sick."
"He got very bad last night, and grew worse ever since till twenty minutes ago, when he died."
Mr. Colebrook's house was not five minutes' walk from home, and I hastened there to perform the office of the dead. I was shown into the room where the corpse lay, just as death had done its work. The sufferer had apparently died in the greatest agony. The bed clothes still evidenced the struggle between the tyrant and the victim.
With the assistance of the man servant who had gone to my house, I laid him out in the room in order, and my only grief before me, was my calm plotting with her paramour, bargaining away the affections which should have lingered like a weeping angel over the couch of him who was not yet buried out of sight! Was it she who had groined in bitterness at her bereavement, now scheming to rob the widow and orphan of his bounty?
Oh, woman, woman, she was a demon! The clock struck twelve, and I turned from my reflections to attend to the corpse. The alcohol which had been provided to wet the face was all used, and I needed a further supply. Taking the dish in my hand, I went to the door with the intention of calling upon Mrs. Colebrook for it.
First rapping on the door, so as not to surprise them, I opened it and stepped in to the room.
"I need a little more alcohol, Mrs. Colebrook," I began.
She rose from her chair, and with one long, loud and most unearthly shriek, she fell upon the floor.
Dr. Bowen's knees smote each other, and he shrank back to the furthest corner of the room.
"Who are you?" he gasped.
"Of course I was very much surprised at this singular reception. Long familiarity with the dead had made me so indifferent to those dreads and fears, which disturb many persons, that I had little consideration for my nervousness on this subject."
"Who are you?" groaned the Doctor, his teeth chattering with terror.
Then it flashed upon my mind that the quilt which enveloped my body was the cause of the mischief. I was involuntarily personating the ghost of the deceased Mr. Colebrook, and I do not wonder that the giddy wife and her more wretched accomplices were terrified, when at midnight I stalked into the room.
I had pinned the counterpane around my neck so that nothing could be seen of me but my face.
